

Walker Says U.S. Main Battleground

By MIKE QUINN

Edwin A. Walker told a U.S. Day rally at Dallas Municipal Auditorium Wednesday night that the main battleground in the world today is right here in America, and it involves the United States vs. the United Nations.

Speaking to a crowd of over 1,000, Walker took pot shots at the United Nations Day celebration scheduled in Dallas Thursday at which UN Ambassador Adlai Stevenson will speak.

Walker said the question has boiled down to which side you are for—the United States or the United Nations.

He took issue with Gov. John Connally for issuing a proclamation for both U.S. Day and UN Day.

"I defy any man who can write a proclamation to you on this day and to the United Nations the next day," Walker told the cheering, flag-waving crowd.

Walker was one of Connally's opponents in last year's gubernatorial race in the Democratic primary.

Of Stevenson's visit here Thursday, Walker stressed that the battle would be waged from the same stage since Stevenson will speak in the same auditorium Thursday night.

"Tonight we stand on a battleground identified on this stage as U.S. Day—the symbol of our sovereignty. Tomorrow night there will stand here a symbol to the communist conspiracy and its United Nations."

Walker also took out after the Central Intelligence Agency, pointing out that it now has 100,000 employes. He predicted that soon the CIA will move its actions from foreign countries into the individual states.

The former Army major general also came out in favor of keeping the poll tax and at one time or another attacked President John Kennedy, former Presidents Dwight Eisenhower, Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman, and former Vice-President Richard Nixon as well as the State Department.

Walker spoke for more than an hour, blasting U.S. foreign policy.

Walter Reed, who served as master of ceremonies, read messages from Congressman Bruce Alger, Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Dan Smoot and Robert Morris.

When Reed read a list of 12 area mayors who were invited and asked them to stand, none was present. They were booed.

Walker read a list of organization sponsoring UN Day and the crowd booed them also.
